The Centre is a temporary home for displaced Orangutans also known as "man of the jungle". They have been rescued from captivity or are young orphans and are trained or re-trained to survive in their natural surroundings. Take a walk on the trails and try to spot semi-wild Orangutans. There are feeding times scheduled everyday at the feeding platform. Kindly be advised that the sightings of Orangutans are not guaranteed as Semenggoh is a rehabilitation center to help wild animals re-adapt to living in the wild. The presence of Orangutans at the feeding platforms during feeding times is entirely up to the primates and they may not be there at all as these are semi-wild animals and they will forage for food in the forest. In fact, the occasional disappearance of the Orangutans is a good indication that they are slowly acclimatizing to the real wilderness and are able to forage for food on their own. On returning to the city, stop for a visit to a pottery workshop for a close up look at nimble hands fashioning works of art. Watch the potter at his wheel and see what happens when pieces of clay are baked and then painted. This is also a good place to pick up souvenirs as a keepsake of your trip.
